The Lowdown on Beans

WITH THE HOLIDAYS OVER and the cold weather having set in, what better way to nourish your body than with beans. First of all, beans are a great source of fiber, which is essential to our bodies because it helps eliminate waste. It also helps to regulate blood sugar levels because it slows the digestion rate and the release of sugar in the bloodstream. Fiber has also been shown to help lower the risks of cancer, heart disease, diabetes, and obesity.

Beans are also a great source of protein, which is one of the most important elements for the maintenance of good health and vitality and is crucial in the growth and development of body components. Protein is important to the structure of red blood cells, for the proper functioning of antibodies resisting infections, for the regulation of enzymes and hormones, and for grown and repair of body tissue and muscle. In combination with whole grains, beans are a perfect protein.

The Importance of Sleep

WE TEND TO UNDERESTIMATE the importance of getting a good night's sleep. Sleep is crucial to our well-being because our bodies use the time to heal and revitalize, and lack of sleep can cause severe health problems, such as immune weakness, overweight, lack of focus, and blood sugar imbalances.

We should sleep 6-8 hours per night. If you have trouble sleeping, try the following natural remedies:

- Try to stick to the same bedtime every night.
- Disconnect from all electronics a few hours before going to bed.
- Take some time to unwind and relax in a cool, dark room.
- Drink some chamomile tea. Chamomile has a natural sedative that relaxes the body.
- Eat plenty of green vegetables. Leafy greens have magnesium, which helps relax muscles and nerves.
- Eat a bowl of oatmeal in the evening. Oats have properties that calm the body and nerves.
- Foods rich in tryptophan are also calming. This is because tryptophan gets converted to melatonin, which is the sleep hormone. Foods rich in tryptophan include: turkey, brown rice, peas, pumpkin seeds, oats, figs, bananas, fish and plain yogurt.
